Agricultural research and/or for development is intertwined with environmental and natural resources development phenomena, and thus meaningful publications from these sectors should present a more wholesome picture than hitherto focusing on one per se. Makerere University Journal of Agricultural and Environmental Sciences, formerly known as Makerere University Agricultural Research Institute Kabanyolo Bulletin (MUARIK), is strategically envisioned to close this gap by publishing scholarly articles in agriculture, forestry, food sciences, environment and related sciences from within and outside sub-Saharan Africa. It is an online journal and open access journal (with occasional prints) of Makerere University, hosted at <https://mujaes.mak.ac.ug/>, but linked to a range of international open access networks for wider visibility. It is a biannual journal that accepts manuscripts of the following nature: original research, literature reviews, letter to the editor, short communications and opinions. The journal is supported by an international cohort of advisory team, and leverages reviewer support from topical researchers obtained from Google Scholar. Feedback from reviewers will not take beyond eight weeks. Submission is by email attachment to mujaes@caes.mak.ac.ug, or jtumutegyereize@gmail.com. Volume 8 presents articles spanning agriculture, food science and environment. Intending authors for upcoming issues are advised to visit our online Instructions to Authors at <https://mujaes.mak.ac.ug/>.
